

Congress of the United States

Washington, DC 20515

March 17, 2025

Susie Wiles
White House Chief of Staff
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Susie Wiles:

Congress has broad authority to conduct oversight of the President and the Executive Branch to inform the legislative process and ensure that the Executive Branch is faithfully executing the laws Congress passes. Widespread conflicts of interest erode public confidence in that faithful execution and open the door to corruption — which, in turn, undermines the President’s agenda. We write today to exercise our oversight responsibility regarding the fact that President Trump’s administration has, in less than two months, been overwhelmed with conflicts of interest and corruption. We request that his Administration provide written assurances that it will immediately remediate the worst violations and take steps to address future concerns.

Despite President Trump’s promises to fight for working families, he has appointed a string of corporate billionaires and industry insiders, putting them in positions to enrich themselves at the expense of ordinary Americans. And despite his 2017 promise to not “take advantage of” the presidency,¹ he has degraded the dignity of the office by using the tools of the federal government to drive customers to his businesses. Meanwhile, his unelected “co-president” Elon Musk is relentlessly attacking and disarming federal agencies that regulate his companies, even as his companies have benefited from billions in federal contracts.

Corruption scandals were a feature of President Trump’s first term. He earned millions from foreign governments and special interest groups that visited his properties, and he “turned the U.S. Secret Service into an ATM for his personal enrichment.”² Meanwhile, his appointees stood to profit from policies they set. From Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross who oversaw natural gas export policy while maintaining a large stake in a gas shipping company,³ to Betsy DeVos who led the Department of Education while maintaining a multi-million-dollar stake in a child “brain performance” company, President Trump’s nominees enriched themselves using leverage they gained in their public service jobs.⁴ Multiple members of the Trump administration resigned under a cloud of ethics concerns, including his Director of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) Dr. Brenda Fitzgerald who purchased stock in a tobacco company while leading public health policy⁵ and William Wehrum who faced allegations that he improperly assisted his former coal and oil industry clients while serving as President Trump’s top air policy official at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).⁶ The list goes on.⁷

Less than two months into President Trump’s second term, his new administration is already beating his earlier record of corruption.⁸ His appointees are former lobbyists, billionaire chief executive officers (CEOs), and stockholders with a direct financial stake in their own policy work. He has appointed lobbyists to lead the agencies they recently lobbied — from former airline lobbyist Sean Duffy to lead the nation’s transportation policy⁹ to crypto lobbyist Paul Atkins to lead securities regulation.¹⁰ Similar, he has appointed industry executives to lead the agencies that regulate their businesses,¹¹ such as fracking company CEO Chris Wright to lead the Energy Department,¹² hedge fund executive Scott Bessent to lead the Treasury Department,¹³ and Martin Makary, executive of a company that produces a weight-loss drug, to lead the Food and Drug Administration.¹⁴ Meanwhile, several of President Trump’s picks own lucrative stock holdings in companies that contract with their agencies — such as Defense Secretary Pete

Meanwhile, President Trump's own business ventures have grown to a scale that makes the conflict-of-interest concerns from his first administration "seem almost quaint" in comparison.¹⁷ He has acquired a publicly traded social media company, Truth Social, that — until his meme coin launch — accounted for most of his wealth.¹⁸ He asserted that he has "NO INTENTION OF SELLING!" Truth Social,¹⁹ and instead transferred shares into a trust controlled by his son.²⁰ And despite previously calling crypto a "scam," President Trump has become a crypto salesman.²¹ In the past year, he has launched a cryptocurrency business, World Liberty Financial,²² and on January 18, 2025, he released the $TRUMP meme coin — which earned his family and business partners close to $100 million in trading fees alone in less than 14 days on the market.²³ Foreign entities that seek to sway his foreign policy decisions can invest in both his

President Trump has also enlarged his network of foreign real estate ventures, with new properties, golf courses, and more in Saudi Arabia, Oman, Vietnam, India, and other countries whose cooperation his businesses depend on²⁶ — giving foreign governments leverage to sway his foreign policy decisions.²⁷ He has also sought to grow his portfolio of domestic real estate. For example, the Trump Organization is currently seeking to buy back the former Trump Hotel in DC that, during his first term, became the “‘epicenter’ of corruption” for foreign dignitaries and “‘anyone looking to ‘curry favor’” with him — which raised serious questions about whether he violated the Constitution’s Foreign Emoluments Clause.²⁸ And perhaps his most well-known property, Mar-a-Lago, has turned into a well-oiled pay-to-play machine. Membership fees have skyrocketed five-fold since 2017,²⁹ and elites can pay millions of dollars for private access to the President over dinner.³⁰ President Trump continues to refuse to divest from this maze of business interests, although every other American president in the modern era has done so.³¹ Even former Vice President Nelson Rockefeller, whose businesses the President often points to as precedent,³² agreed to take “whatever steps are necessary” to resolve potential conflicts of interests, undergoing months of intense congressional hearings about the conflicts and releasing tax returns from a dozen years to address ethics concerns.³³

Perhaps most concerning, President Trump has ceded power to the world’s richest man, Elon Musk, who stands to profit from the Department of Government Efficiency’s (DOGE) attempts to raze the executive branch. Since President Trump took office, at least 11 of the agencies with “investigations, pending complaints or enforcement actions” against Musk’s companies have been hamstrung, including through the firing of the agencies’ independent commissioners and rolling back the agencies’ independence.³⁴ Meanwhile, Musk’s companies — which have already received at least $38 billion in federal funding³⁵ — are vying for new federal contracts. For example, it appears that the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) may cancel a $2.4 billion contract that it awarded to Verizon in 2023 to upgrade a communications platform for air traffic control facilities, and the FAA plans to pay Musk’s Starlink to help manage U.S. airspace.³⁶

Meanwhile, the State Department announced that it would pay over $400 million to purchase vehicles from Musk’s Tesla; following public outcry, the Department announced it was pausing that purchase (though documentation creates some ambiguity about the Department’s current plans).³⁷ In addition, Musk is pushing to privatize functions performed by companies in which he has a financial stake. For example, he is insisting that agencies increase their reliance on artificial intelligence while simultaneously building out the AI arm of X (formerly Twitter) and seeking to buy OpenAI, the founder of ChatGPT.³⁸ And he appears to be angling for the FAA to privatize portions of the air traffic control system in which his company SpaceX has an interest.³⁹ Musk has done all of this without so much as disclosing his financial interests to the public.⁴⁰

At the same time that President Trump’s own conflicts and those of his team are on the rise, he is decapitating the watchdog offices responsible for enforcing public integrity standards in the executive branch. In just his first three weeks in office, he attempted to fire at least 17 Inspectors General who were working to root corruption out of federal agencies.⁴¹ That attempt is currently being litigated.⁴² Furthermore, President Trump fired the head of the Office of Special Counsel (OSC), which investigates prohibited practices like nepotism, racial discrimination, and unauthorized political activity by federal workers.⁴³ The Trump administration also reassigned responsibility for the Department of Justice’s (DOJ) ethics oversight away from DOJ’s top career official and gave it to President Trump’s former criminal defense lawyer and an early-career political staffer.⁴⁴ Finally, President Trump became the first president in history to fire the director of the Office of Government Ethics (OGE), the primary office responsible for mitigating conflicts of interest in the executive branch.⁴⁵

These immense financial conflicts of interest have real-world stakes for the American public. President Trump, Musk, and his appointees have multiple incentives to funnel taxpayer dollars to their own pockets, even if it means hurting the American workers President Trump claims to champion. This risk is not hypothetical. For example, during his last term, President Trump approved the Sprint-T-Mobile merger that was called “bad for ordinary Americans but suspiciously good for Donald Trump,” as T-Mobile “suddenly became a big customer at his hotels once it needed approval for [its] merger.”⁴⁶ Similarly, his administration sided with the payday lending industry in opposing a rule to protect consumers around the same time that the industry hosted its conventions at his hotel, earning him $1 million.⁴⁷ And this time, President Trump, Musk, and his appointees will be able to put their thumbs on the scale of even more policy decisions to enrich themselves. For example, as President Trump works to erode the independence of the Federal Communications Commission, he enhances his ability to pressure it to treat social media sites like Truth Social more leniently or to target disfavored media companies.⁴⁸ Meanwhile, Musk is now sending inexperienced SpaceX employees to rapidly change the FAA in ways that could enrich himself and his own SpaceX business while making air travel less safe for everyone.⁴⁹ Furthermore, President Trump and Commerce Secretary Lutnick, whose firm is a major crypto investor, can discourage financial regulation of cryptocurrencies, even as unregulated crypto markets present warning signs of a bubble that could lead to another financial crash.⁵⁰

These conflicts are real, but President Trump has done virtually nothing to mitigate them. During his last term, a week after taking office, he released an executive order requiring appointees to agree to an ethics pledge.⁵¹ But now, over a month into his second term, President Trump has still not issued any such pledge — though the past three presidential administrations did so.⁵² Furthermore, although the Trump Organization released a 2025 “ethics plan” for managing the President’s personal conflicts of interest,⁵³ that plan is paper thin when stacked against his myriad conflicts of interest.⁵⁴ President Trump has placed his assets into a trust that is managed by his children instead of an independent trustee.⁵⁵ The trust is revocable (meaning he can regain access to the assets at any time) and he is its sole beneficiary.⁵⁶ The Trump Organization’s plan allows him to continue to receive “general business updates” that may sway his decision-making on policy.⁵⁷ The plan also adopts more lenient standards than its 2017 predecessor.⁵⁸ And under the plan, he can continue to buy and sell assets without so much as a review by the Trump

Organization’s Ethics Advisor as long as the deal is worth less than $10 million.⁵⁹ Finally, unlike during his first term — when the Trump Organization vowed that “[n]o new foreign deals will be made whatsoever during the duration of President Trump’s presidency”⁶⁰ — this time, his organization is opening the door to new deals with foreign private actors while he is president.⁶¹ Indeed, President Trump recently expressed interest in “clean[ing] out” the Gaza Strip and forcing out its people to make way for real estate developments that would capitalize on Gaza’s “phenomenal location, on the sea.”⁶²

Even now, it is not too late for President Trump to reverse course and put our national interests ahead of his personal dealings.

To do so, we ask that he not just pay lip service to anti-corruption values but instead take the following steps⁶³:

- First, reinstate the government watchdogs who President Trump purportedly fired, including all Inspectors General, the OGE Director, and the OSC Director, and commit to protecting those offices from further political interference.
- Second, thoroughly vet potential nominees for all conflicts of interest and refuse to appoint anyone who would enter with clear conflicts that existing recusal and divestment rules alone cannot resolve.
- Third, promptly issue an ethics pledge that is at least as robust as the Biden ethics pledge or President Trump’s own pledge from 2017,⁶⁴ and ensure robust enforcement.
- Fourth, as every other president in the modern era has done, President Trump should divest from his business holdings, in this case by either liquidating the Trump Organization assets or placing them in a truly blind trust operated by an independent trustee who is instructed to divest the assets and reinvest the proceeds in other holdings so that the President does not know what the trust contains. He should also disclose his tax returns from the past three years.

- Finally, President Trump should revoke Mr. Musk’s power to profit from his efforts to manipulate the executive branch for his own benefit. Mr. Musk should also be required to promptly release his financial disclosure form so that the public can understand his potential conflicts of interest.⁶⁵

The American people deserve a presidential administration that governs exclusively in the public’s interest. We urge President Trump and the wealthy elites to whom he has handed governing power to make good on his promise to put America first, above his and their own self-interest.

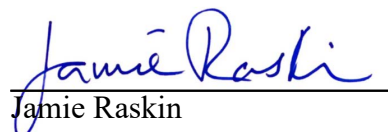

We request that the White House respond to the following questions by March 31, 2025:

1. Will President Trump commit to reinstate all government watchdogs he has purportedly fired and to protect their independence from political interference, including inspectors general and the heads of the Office of Government Ethics, Office of Special Counsel, and Merit Systems Protection Board?
2. Will President Trump commit not to appoint additional officials whose personal finances or professional ties present direct conflicts of interest that cannot be resolved by corrective actions under existing ethics law?
3. Will President Trump issue an ethics pledge requiring nominees to commit to ethics requirements, as he did during his first term?
4. Will President Trump commit to divest from his private business interests, as every prior president in the modern era has done?
5. Will President Trump commit to disclose his tax returns from the past three years?
6. Will President Trump require Mr. Musk to publicly release his financial disclosure form?
